

Biodata: Jessica Vega-Abarzúa, José Gabriel Brauchy, Natalia Vezzoli Lara, Paulina Subiabre Ubilla

Jessica Vega-Abarzúa holds a Master of TESOL from the University of Melbourne and is a doctoral student in Linguistics at the Universidad de Concepción, Chile. She serves as a lecturer at the Universidad Adventista de Chile. Her research interests include reading comprehension in EFL contexts, teacher education, and English language teaching in rural settings. Her work also explores the development of teaching materials, the linguistic competence of pre-service English teachers, and the integration of sociocultural approaches into language teaching.

José Gabriel Brauchy holds a PhD. in Literature from New York University, a Master of Arts in Romance Languages from University of Illinois at Chicago, and a Master in Comparative Literature from University of Paris, France. He teaches upper level courses of culture, academic writing, and literature in the EFL Teacher Education BA Program at Universidad del Bío-Bío. He currently serves as Program Head.

Natalia Vezzoli Lara holds a degree in English language teaching from the Universidad Adventista de Chile. She currently works as an English teacher at a private-subsidized school in Lota, Chile, where she teaches both primary and secondary students. Her professional interests include reading comprehension, as well as multimodal and situated learning.

Paulina Subiabre Ubilla holds a PhD in English Language from the University of Glasgow, specializing in phonetic variation in the acquisition of English as a foreign language. She is an academic at the Faculty of Education Sciences at the University of Talca and a visiting researcher at IESED-CHILE. Her work focuses on English language teaching, sociolinguistics, phonetics, phonology, and interculturality. She has taught in Chile and abroad and has designed programs on second language acquisition and linguistic variation.